Whether cooked or raw, having extra chicken in the freezer is always a good thing. (Especially when the grocery store had a two-for-one special on drumsticks). Chicken freezes easily and thaws beautifully...when stored properly. This is the best way to do it. Although most raw chicken is sold in plastic packaging, this packaging is not suitable for the freezer and can cause frostbite. Wrap the bagged chicken in a sheet of heavy-duty aluminum foil or unwrap (do not wash!) and place the raw chicken in plastic zip-top freezer bags. Squeeze out as much air as possible before sealing the bag. Raw chicken can be stored indefinitely in the freezer if stored properly, but the USDA recommends using up to one year if the chicken is whole and up to nine months if the chicken is cut into parts. Caitlin Benschel Never leave frozen meat on the counter to thaw. Try one of these methods for thawing frozen chicken instead. The safest way to thaw frozen raw chicken is to refrigerate frozen poultry. Place the package of raw chicken in a container or bowl with side walls to catch the drippings. Depending on the size, it may take at least 24 hours to thaw completely, so plan ahead and take the thawing time into account when preparing your meal. If you only have a few hours to thaw the chicken, you can use the cold water method to thaw it the same day. Even if the frozen chicken is wrapped, place it in an airtight plastic zip-lock bag and submerge it in a large bowl filled with cold (never hot) tap water. The chicken should always be tightly closed before coming into contact with water. Change the water every 30 minutes until your chicken is thawed. Defrosting food in the microwave may be the fastest way, but not always the best. Microwaved food tends to create hot spots, so your raw meat may be thawed in some places and still frozen in others. Make sure you put them in the microwave immediately after defrosting and only until after full boil. Sergio Mendoza Hochmann/Getty Images Cooked chicken can be stored safely in the refrigerator for up to two days. Freezing after this time is best. Shredded chicken thaws much faster than whole chicken pieces, but you can freeze whole pieces if you wish. Either way, make sure you place the chicken in zippered plastic bags and squeeze as much air out of them as possible before sealing the bag. It is recommended to break up cooked chicken into smaller portions rather than freezing a large batch in a bag. This way you can defrost exactly the amount of chicken you need for one meal. Defrost cooked chicken (in a plastic freezer bag) in the refrigerator overnight. According to the USDA, frozen boiled chicken (and meat) can last up to three months in the freezer, so be sure to write the expiration date on the bag with a frostproof marker. Thanks for the answer!
