Thanks for your understanding. Google's Chromecast dongle is the best way to send video from a phone, tablet, or PC to your television, but its lack of a proper remote and TV interface can be a sticking point. But if you have an Amazon Fire TV or Fire TV Stick, a new app could give you the best of both worlds. It's called YouMap Cast Receiver, it costs just $8, and it duplicates much of Chromecast's functionality, including tab mirroring in Chrome and sending video from Cast-supported apps. I've tried it, and it works fairly well with a few caveats. (Hat tip to AFTVnews for the discovery.) Until the end of August, you can try YouMap for free by downloading the APK file and sideloading it onto a Fire TV. This is sort of a complicated process, but AFTVnews has some helpful instructions on how to sideload Fire TV apps from a computer. If you have an Android phone or tablet, you can follow this simpler sideloading process instead. What works, what doesn't After dealing with the sideloading process, setting up the app is easy enough. Head to the Fire TV's Settings menu, then go to System > Applications > Manage Installed Applications. Scroll down to YouMap Chromecast Receiver, and launch the app. I did have to restart the Fire TV (through Settings > System) to get YouMap working properly. Launching YouMap for the first time from Fire TV Settings. YouMap works in exactly the same way as Chromecast. Just open up a Cast-enabled app on an iOS or Android device, and a Cast button should appear on the screen. Select "YouMap" from the Cast menu, then select a video or song from your phone or tablet. It should start playing through the Fire TV. Casting also works through Google's desktop Chrome browser if you have the Google Cast extension installed. This lets you mirror any browser tab, which is great for playing music through your home entertainment setup, and for viewing photos on the big screen from sites like Facebook. Tab mirroring also works with video sites, such as Hulu.com, though performance can be choppy and audio is prone to latency. Some websites, including YouTube, support native Casting, which eliminates these problems. YouMap supports mirroring Chrome browser tabs on video sites like Hulu.com. There's just one catch: YouMap doesn't work with video apps that use digital rights management (DRM). With HBO Go, Google Play Movies & TV, and Hulu, I received error messages saying they couldn't load licensed or protected content. YouTube, Twitch, Pluto TV, and Watch Food Network wouldn't even show YouMap in the Cast menu, and Crunchyroll failed to connect with the Fire TV. Still, I was pleasantly surprised by how many apps did work. Here's a list of apps that ran successfully when casting from my iPhone 6 Plus: CBS Comedy Central Crackle Google Play Music MLB.TV Nick Pandora PBS Kids Plex Rdio WatchESPN While YouMap doesn't work with Netflix, that's a non-issue for Fire TV users; Netflix already supports casting to Amazon's media streamer out of the box. Just look for "Fire TV" in the Cast menu from Netflix's iOS and Android apps. YouMap taps into the existing Google Cast buttons in apps such as CBS (left) and Pandora (right). A couple other quirks worth mentioning: YouMap doesn't support controlling volume with your phone or tablet's hardware buttons, as some apps do with Chromecast. Apps that have on-screen volume controls seem to work fine. Also, if the Fire TV is in sleep mode, you may have to initiate casting twice, as the first attempt merely wakes the device without actually making the connection. A useful app, with risks I've written before that Chromecast is a love-it-or-hate-it device. For couch potatoes who always keep a phone or tablet handy, using a touch screen to browse and send content to the television can feel borderline magical. Adding those capabilities to the Fire TV could be well-worth the $8 asking price. My only concern with YouMap is that Google will at some point shut it down. Even though Google doesn't have control of the Amazon Appstore, it can still stop unauthorized cast receivers from working, and it has done so in the past. You could very well spend $8 now and be left with a useless app a few months down the road. What are your other options? If you haven't already bought a Fire TV, you could pick up an Android TV device such as Google's Nexus Player, Razer's Forge TV, or Nvidia's Shield Android TV. All of them include full Chromecast functionality, along with a proper remote and TV apps. Just be aware that none of these devices offer an Amazon app, making them non-starters for Amazon Prime subscribers. The other option is to wait things out. Amazon recently launched Fling as an answer to Google Cast, and while its app support is sorely lacking right now, that could soon change soon; it's supposed to be quite easy for app makers to support Fling if they already work with Chromecast. To set up your Chromecast built-in TV, download the Google Home app Connect to WiFi Connect your phone or tablet to the same WiFi network as your TV. The Google Cast SDK enables you to extend your Android, iOS, or Web app to direct its streaming video and audio to a TV or sound system. Cast Connect allows your Android TV app to receive messages and broadcast media status as if it were a Chromecast. Cast apps developed for video and audio can also work on audio-only devices. The latest version of the Google Cast SDK simplifies several complex parts of the previous SDK and addresses the major pain points identified by content partners and developers. It reduces the amount of code needed to Cast-enable your app, and provides a consistent API across Android, iOS, and Web. Android TV Receivers use the Cast Connect library to allow existing sender applications to communicate with Android TV applications via the Cast protocol. Cast Connect builds on top of the Cast infrastructure, with your Android TV app acting as a receiver. By adding Google Cast functionality to their apps, developers can gain visits, engagement, and/or higher monetization. Here are two real-world examples of how companies have successfully used Google Cast technology. The Comedy Central app lets fans watch their favorite shows in full and on demand from mobile devices. The company created a cast-enabled app so users could bring their small screen experience to their TVs. Now with Chromecast, users watch at least 50 percent more video, with 1.5 times more visits than the average Comedy Central app user. Haystack TV is a personal news channel that lets consumers watch news on any screen, at any time. The company integrated Google Cast technology so users can browse their headline news, choose other videos to play, and even remove videos from their play queue without disrupting the current video on their TVs. With Chromecast, average weekly viewing time has doubled and customers have dramatically improved their ability to stay informed. One-third of Haystack TV customers now view their news via Chromecast. Stream entertainment in up to 4K HDR. The homescreen is focused on recommending shows and movies for you, relegating some of your apps along with app search and discovery to a secondary tab. A major side effect is the lack of proper access to the full Play Store, even though the app is still there. Here are some tricks you can use to open it. While this tutorial is focused on the Play Store, you can also apply the same steps for two other apps that are pre-installed on the Chromecast with Google TV but not readily accessible: Google Play Games and Google Play Movies & TV. Why accessing the full Play Store matters The Apps tab on Google TV is enough for launching the apps and games you've installed as well as checking out new ones to try. You can even use voice search to look for specific apps. But that's where the interface stops. If you want to manage your existing apps, manually check for updates and install them, and change settings, you need to access the full Play Store. The Play Store app has tabs for browsing apps and games, but also a proper settings menu where you can manage and update the ones you've installed, switch accounts to grab apps that your partner or roommate bought, and change a few settings regarding automatic updates, payment methods, parental controls, and more. While all of this may be trivial to most Chromecast users, many of us still like having access and control over these features, and that's where opening the Play Store app is important. Method 1: Google Assistant The easiest way to access the Play Store on the Chromecast with Google TV is to just tap the Assistant button on the remote and say, "Play Store." The Assistant will open the Play Store for you. It's really as easy as that. Method 2: App settings The second method is a bit more involved, but will be handy if you don't want to speak aloud or if you'd rather never use Assistant. Open the side panel on your Chromecast, then head to Settings > Apps > See all apps > Show system apps > Google Play Store > Open. The steps are outlined in the screenshots below. Method 3: Button mapping This third method will require a bit of a setup, but once it's done, you'll have one-button access to the Play Store whenever you want. First, you'll need to download Button Mapper and follow the steps in our previous tutorial to install it and give it the permissions it needs. When that's done, open Button Mapper and choose the remote button you'd like to use to launch the Play Store. In the screenshots below, I chose the home button, but only when it's double tapped. To set it up, select Home Button > Double tap, and in the pop-up, switch to Applications from the drop-down and look for the Play Store. The steps are outlined below. Method 4: App shortcut Like the previous method, this one is similarly complicated to set up but simple once it's done. Basically, if you're familiar with the process of sideloading an APK on your Chromecast, it's a no-brainer solution because all you have to do is grab this small APK from senior XDA member edwaine and install it. It'll create a shortcut in your launcher which immediately launches the Play Store when selected. But if you've never sideloaded an app and you're not interested in doing it for other purposes, you're better off skipping this. Method 5: Third-party launcher A final easy trick is to use a third-party launcher for your Chromecast. These don't replace the default launcher, but act as another app which, when opened, is just an app drawer of your installed apps. As inceptive as that may sound, the real utility here is launching sideloaded apps that work well on Android TV, but that Google hasn't deemed worthy of being officially approved to show in the launcher. The other benefit is that they display built-in apps too, including the ones Google doesn't want you to see like the Play Store. You just scroll to it and select it. The two launchers I tried that successfully showed the Play Store are Sideload Launcher and SideApps. The former is one the trailblazers of its category, but it hasn't been updated since 2015. It still works, though, and is free without ads. The latter is more modern, kept more up to date, and is free with ads (though I haven't seen one yet). Left: Sideload Launcher. Right: SideApps. Out of all these methods, button mapping suits me best. I just do the button combo whenever I need to go to the full Play Store app and it launches, no talking to Assistant or delving six-levels-deep into sub-menus. The shortcut is another handy solution when/I forget the key combo to trigger the Play Store with my remote.
