After years of maintaining and repairing your beloved car yourself, your favorite car has finally gone to the great junkyard in the sky. Now, it's time to make new memories in a gorgeous new vehicle. And with 16,794 franchised dealers across the United States and even more independent dealers, finding a reputable and trustworthy car dealership can be tough. With that said, they have their share of problems. They're either far too negative or positive to the point where it's a little shady. But don't rely on reviews as your only source. Instead, go to a trusted friend or family member. Here are a few things to keep an eye out for The Homer Skelton Ford website is a great example. Eventually, you'll need to make your way to the dealership. Again, The Homer Skelton Ford site is a great example, with financing info on the homepage's menu bar. Rooting for the underdog is always fun, but it's hard to beat quality experience. If you're uncomfortable with a dealer or dealership's sales techniques, thank them for their time, walk away, and head to the next dealership on your list. No worries! Check out our guide on smarter ways to buy a car. And you understand that no matter how meticulous you are about maintenance, even the most reliable of vehicles is going to break down every once in a while. When your truck breaks down on the highway, however, it can be a frightening and stressful experience.

This way, you will be out of other drivers' way, and less likely to add insult to injury by being involved in an accident. It's important to stay calm when this happens and to be smart during the next steps. First, stay in your vehicle. Trying to cross several lanes puts you and other drivers at risk. This is especially important if the truck breaks down when visibility is low, such as at dusk, dawn, or in the wee hours. There might not be many cars on the road to impact yours, but if someone does come flying along, they'll have a greater chance of avoiding you if they see your hazards. A white flag is universally understood to be a signal that a motorist has broken down. However, a dead battery can happen to the best of us. Or maybe you can't get a signal on your cell in the area where you truck breaks down. It's okay to leave the vehicle, exercising caution, for as long as it takes to reach the box and contact the authorities. But resist that temptation, no matter how much of a hurry you're in. It simply isn't safe or smart — you never can tell who's a Good Samaritan, and who's a serial killer. Keeping a cool head when your truck breaks down can help you avoid further problems. What To Do with a Totaled Car Fortunately, getting Fortunately, getting the bad news doesn't have to be the worst case scenario. You still have options. However, when an insurance company deems a vehicle totaled, this means the cost of repairs exceeds the value of the car. Depending on the extent of the damages, your vehicle may still have significant value. Let's get started. You may end up with a reliable vehicle down the road. If it is, you probably wouldn't get much from the insurance claim anyway. If the engine sustained serious damage, repairing it will require time, knowledge, and money. But if you're only dealing with minor damage or cosmetic issues, fixing your car is doable. If this isn't an issue, set up a workshop in your garage and start bringing your totaled car back to life.

Don't jump the gun, though. There are some things you need to consider. A little online research will give you an answer. This helps to ensure you're getting compensated properly. Make sure your policy allows for this. If you owe money on your car, the lender holds the title. You'll need to involve them in the insurance transaction. Someone less fortunate could put it to use. It's important you only give to a legitimate organization. You'll also want to find a charity that accepts taxdeductible donations. You'll also need to compile as many service records as possible. Then, they'll either repair it and find a new owner or sell it for parts. You'll need this when itemizing your tax deductions. This is another option better suited to older cars that didn't have a high value prior to the accident. To do this, you'll have to sign the title over to the motor vehicle agency in your city. Depending on the condition of your vehicle, they'll either strip it for parts or repair it and try to resell it. Don't let a junkyard overcharge you for these things. If you're not sure whether selling your totaled car is right for you, learn more about it here. The truth is, even something like hail damage can cause an insurance company to total out a vehicle. In these situations, continuing to drive the car is a reality. It's also a good move if you love your vehicle but can't afford to get it repaired at the moment. However, if it runs well, it makes sense to keep it and fix the cosmetic damage when you have the money. There's a good chance you can get enough for a hefty down payment on a new car. A dealership will buy it from you, repair it, and sell it at an auction. Or, they'll sell it for parts. You'll then need to start looking for the best offer. You don't want to jump at the first offer only to learn it was way too low. In some cases, it may lead to a better situation for you. There are mobility solutions that can work for you. Read on to learn which vehicles work best!

Having a car to drive is a huge part of maintaining that independent lifestyle. Mobility solutions for the disabled come in all kinds of shapes and sizes. Here are a few of our favorites. The Odyssey can be modified to remove front seats so that wheelchairbound drivers can operate the vehicle. It's also not a vehicle that will break the bank, and it should be reliable for years to come. It can be modified to include a wheelchair lift that extends from the side of the truck. This is a perfect option for helping your parents stay mobile and maintaining their ability to haul things they need. It can come with a hoist lift, hand controls, power assist seats, steering devices, and more. After all, there are plenty of disabled people who still love sports cars. You'll also have options for wheelchair restraints, hand controls, left foot acceleration, and many more features. But for many people, that's part of the charm. This could be the way to go for those who like to stand out a little. Even if it's just a dirt road on some country property, being able to take on challenging terrain can be essential. It's certainly worth checking out their reimbursement policy for mobility solutions. Ask about ways to keep the overall expense lower, and you might be surprised at what you can be reimbursed for. Then check out some of the history behind your favorites at Motor Era! Consult our handy guide to help you every step of the way. To others, a company car is there to serve a specific purpose within the business. But, just as with a personal vehicle, you're going to be restricted by budget, function, and practicality. Read on to learn more. If so, you'll need a car with many seats like a van. Maybe a luxury vehicle like a BMW would make sense for you instead of a used Toyota. Perhaps pick an interesting car that's unique and stands out from the crowd. Whether you lease or buy will largely depend on your company budget and your plans for the car in the future.

Leasing is great for those without much capital to buy a car, but you'll be pouring money into a car that you don't truly own. However, used cars can come with problems, maintenance issues, and won't last as long. Wouldn't make sense for you to roll up to a business meeting in a Hummer, would it? An ubermodern app company would go great with a small innovative car like a SmartCar, but perhaps not so much with a Ram truck. However, don't get greedy or overzealous with your choice. It's tempting to go out and get a Mercedes for yourself, but this might not make sense with your budget or your company. Just because you have the budget now for a fancy car doesn't mean you will in the next few years. Think economically go for a car that will save you on insurance, gas, and maintenance costs in the long run. Make sure you follow our tips to choose one that's going to do what it needs and make sure you're going to be happy to drive it around. Find your Owner Manual,
