How to clean burnt iron base plate

Cast iron jeans with seasoning need to wear. The guitars need tuning. Cast iron pans need condiment. Campo di Campo 27 August 2018 The condiment is the black patina that accumulates on your cast iron pan with a regular use, a non-stick surface that is quite slick for skate eggs through the pan, but hard enough to resist heat Fiery needed to stop a steak properly. It's home at home you do to turn a cast iron pan into a wrapping, and it's important for your kitchen as an iron is made. There is a lot of advice on the Internet on the condiment and care of cast iron, and even a lot of disinformation, so we want to set the record straight on what you really need to know to correctly season a cast iron pan. We spent years to haunt about how to make the best cast iron pan, which means that it dedicates hundreds of hours looking and compare different ways to season it. This included the test of a wide range of oils, heat intervals and techniques during the consultation of chemists, machinists and lovers of cast iron throughout the country. If subjected to high heat, long grease molecule chains break in short chain polymers that bind with carbon and naked iron naturally produced, forming a type of enamel. This is the seasoning, and has smooth and non-stick properties similar to Teflon. It also forms a natural barrier between the air and the naked iron in your pan, acting as the first line of defense against rust. The seasoning will develop layer by layer, each time the pan is used. If you put the â €
