Film is often referred to as a movie or a moving picture. Cinema is a modern and popular art form created for business and entertainment purposes. Filming has become a popular prank season around the world, and cinemas are always waiting for feature films. Movies are made in two main ways. The first is the methods of photographing and recording with film cameras. This procedure is performed by photographing images or objects. This procedure is performed with the use of computer graphics animation or computer graphics techniques. Both can be combined with other techniques and visual effects. Filming usually takes a relatively long time. It also requires a desktop computer for everyone from director, producer, editor, costume designer, visual effects and more. Definition and Definition of Film/Movie The actors who play roles in a film are called actors (male) or actresses (female). There is also the term extras used for supporting characters with several roles in the film. It is different with the main actors who take on more and more roles. The actor and actress must have good acting skills, which is consistent with the theme of the film they are shooting in. In some scenes, the role of the actor may be replaced by a stuntman or a stuntman. The existence of a stuntman is important to replace the actors who portray the complex and extreme scenes commonly found in action movies. Videos can also be used to convey specific messages from the director. Some industries also use films to convey and portray their symbols and culture. Filmmaking is also a form of expressing a person's thoughts, ideas, concepts, feelings and moods that are visualized in the cinema. The movie itself is mostly fiction, although some of it is based on or based on true events. There are also documentaries with the original and photos or biographical videos that tell the character's story. There are many other popular movie genres ranging from action movies, horror movies, comedies, romantic movies, fantasy movies, thrillers, dramas, science fiction movies, crime movies, documentaries and more. This is a little information about the definition of film or movie. Information is cited from various sources and references. I hope this can be useful. "TV movie" The first television broadcasts were experimental, sporadic broadcasts that could only be viewed within a very short distance of a broadcast tower from the 1930s. Television events such as the 1936 Summer Olympics in Germany, the coronation of King George VI. In Great Britain in 1934 and David Sarnoff's famous presentation at the 1939 New York World's Fair in the United States hastened the development of this medium, but World War II halted development until the end of the war. The 1940 World Movie inspired many Americans to buy their first television, and then in 1948, the popular radio show Texaco Star Theater became the first weekly television show, giving host Milton Burle the nickname "Mr Television", and shows that the medium is a solid, modern form of entertainment that can attract advertisers. The first live national television broadcast in the United States occurred on September 4, 1951, when President Harry Truman's address to the Japan Peace Conference in San Francisco was broadcast over AT&T's transcontinental cable and microwave radio system to broadcast stations in local markets. The first national color broadcast (1954 Tournament of Roses Parade) in the United States took place on January 1, 1954. For the next decade, most network broadcasts and almost all local programming were still in black and white. The color change was announced in the fall of 1965, when more than half of all the network's prime-time programming was broadcast in color. TheThe best time for flowers came just a year later. In 19402, the network's final break in daytime programming switched to color, leading to the network's first all-color season. ááá Formats and genres ááá See also: List of genres § Film and television formats and genres Television shows are more diverse than most other forms of media because a wide variety of formats and genres can be presented. STREAMING MEDIA Streaming media is multimedia content that is continuously received and presented by an end user while being delivered by a provider. The verb "stream" refers to the process of delivering or receiving media in this way. Clarification Needed Streaming refers to the way the media is delivered, not the media itself. The distinction between delivery method and broadcast media is specific to telecommunications networks, as most delivery systems are streaming (e.g. radio, television, streaming applications) or inherently (eg books, videos, audio CDs). I'm having trouble streaming content over the internet. For example, users whose Internet connection does not have enough bandwidth may experience downtime, lag, or slow content buffering. Users who do not have compatible hardware or software may not be able to stream certain content. Live streaming is the delivery of Internet content in real time, just as live TV broadcasts content over the television signal. Online streaming requires some form of source media (eg video camera, audio interface, screen capture software), an encoder to digitize the content. Remember when YouTube was not the YouTube you know today => when Steve Chen, Chad Hurley and Jade Karim activated the youtube domain, they had a media publisher, vision.a, and a content delivery network to distribute and deliver content. Live broadcasts may not be recorded at the starting point, although this is often the case. Streaming is an alternative to downloading files, i.e. a process where the end user receives the content content file before watching or listening to it. With streaming, the end user can use their media player to start playing digital video or digital audio content before transferring the entire file. The term streaming media can refer to media other than video and audio, such as live closed captioning, newspapers, and live text, all of which are considered streaming text. Creative work can be literary, artistic, educational or musical. The purpose of copyright is to protect the original expression of an idea in the form of a creative work, but not the idea itself.678 Copyright is subject to limitations based on public interest considerations, such as the fair use doctrine in the United States. In some jurisdictions, copyrighted works must be physically fixed. It is often shared between multiple authors, each of whom owns a set of rights to use or license the work and are commonly referred to as rights holders. and moral rights such as attribution13. Copyright may be granted under public law, in which case it is considered a territorial right. This means that the copyright granted by the laws of that country does not extend beyond the territory of that particular jurisdiction. This type of copyright varies from country to country; many countries, and sometimes a large group of countries, have agreements with other countries on the procedures to be followed when works cross national borders or conflict between national laws14. Public law copyrights typically expire 50-100 years after the creator's death, depending on the jurisdiction. Some countries require certain copyright formalities5 to establish copyright, others recognize copyright in any completed work without formal registration. Copyright is generally seen as essential for promoting cultural diversity and creativity. However, Park argues that, contrary to popular belief, imitation and copying do not reduce creativity or cultural diversity, but actually enhance them. This argument was supported by many examples such as Millet and Van Gogh, Picasso, Manet and Monet etc.15Credit (Latin loan) is a trust that allows one party to provide money or resources to another party, with the latter party not immediately repaying the first party (creating a debt), but promising to repay or return those resources (or other equivalent materials).) later 1.
