(Image credit: Laptop Mag) While modern Chromebooks can run Android apps, they lack the tight integration with Android phones that you see between iOS and macOS or even Windows 10 and Android. However, Google has been trying to improve with its "Better Together" initiative started in 2018 and last July we reported on some major changes coming. Now, the team at 9to5Google has uncovered signs that these efforts are getting closer to fruition with a new feature referred to as "Eche" in Chrome tags. Based on the code, it appears to be a screen mirroring feature exclusive to Pixel devices. Chrome tags often reveal features ahead of time as the developers need to lay the groundwork for the functionality in Chromium. If you are unfamiliar, these are the toggles in the Chromium code that let you enable and disable features, for example, here's how to turn off the new grid tab layout for Chrome on Android using Chrome tags. In this case, the code allows you to "Enable Eche App SWA," meaning a System Web App. It appears that this built-in app will allow you to essentially cast (Eche means "throw" or "cast" in Spanish) an app on your phone to your Chromebook and then interact with the app. There do appear to be limitations regarding which apps will support this functionality — whether this is a determination the system is making or something app developers will need to handle isn't clear at the moment. Additional notation in the code also points to this being an exclusive feature for Pixel devices at launch. Google has been making a point of highlighting some features as "Pixel-first" lately, so this wouldn't be a surprise and doesn't indicate it will be a permanent Pixel exclusive. While features showing up in Chromium flags don't give us a hard timeline for their release, with Google I/O likely happening in May, that would seem like a perfect time for this feature to get an official release. Or, on a Mac, open QuickTime Player from the Applications folder and select File > New Screen Recording. This feature is part of Windows 10 and applies to all popular laptop brands like Dell, HP, Lenovo, etc. The Xbox Game Bar can't record the desktop (without any open programs) or the File Explorer. The screen recording button is greyed out on these two interfaces. It will work on any other app on the desktop that has focus. Go to Settings > Gaming. On the Xbox Game Bar screen, check if the toggle switch for recording game clips is enabled. Exit Settings and open the app you want to screen record. Press Windows key + G simultaneously to open the Game Bar overlay on top of the PC screen. Select the Capture icon to display the Capture widget on the side. Select the microphone icon to allow the Game Bar to record sound or your narration. Keep it on mute for silent recordings. Select the Start recording button (or press Win + Alt + R) to begin a screen recording. A small Capture Status widget will open on the side to display the recording time elapsed and the Stop Recording button. Select the Stop Recording button to stop the recording. Select the Game clip recorded notification if it appears to open the Gallery and view your capture. Alternatively, select Show all captures on the Capture window. The Gallery window displays the current recording and all the previously saved ones. Play the current recording or select an older saved one. Use the Pencil icon to rename your files if you want. To open the video file in the Captures folder within File Explorer, select the Open file location icon or Open in File Explorer icon. All video captures are saved as MP4 files. Apple laptops don't have the Xbox Game Bar, but they have two methods for recording screens that are convenient and better. The Screenshot toolbar The QuickTime Player The Screenshot toolbar is available in macOS Mojave or later. The QuickTime Player works with all macOS versions. Record the entire screen or a selected part of the screen with the Screenshot toolbar. Press Shift + Command + 5 to open the Screenshot toolbar and a selection overlay on the screen. Select Record Entire Screen to take a screen recording of the entire desktop or the Record Selected Portion button to record a smaller area. Before you press the Record Selected Portion button, drag the boundaries of the selection box to define an area of the screen to record. Alternatively, drag the selection box to anywhere else from within the four corners. Select Options to open a dropdown menu. Use the choices to set a different save location, record with the microphone turned on, and start the recording after a pre-defined interval. Select Record to begin the screen recording. Press the Esc key if you want to cancel the recording. Press the Stop button on the menu bar to stop the recording or use the Command + Control + Esc keyboard shortcut. A thumbnail of the video appears in the lower-right corner of the screen. The next actions depend on how you want to use the recording. Swipe the thumbnail to the right to save the recording. Click the thumbnail to open and play the recording. You can use the Trim button to trim the recording or select the Share button to share it. Drag the thumbnail to move the recording to any other document or location (like a chat window or the Trash). Control-click the thumbnail for more options from the right-click menu. If you have macOS Mojave or earlier, use QuickTime Player to record your screen. In newer versions of macOS, selecting New Screen Recording from the QuickTime Player opens the Screenshot toolbar. Open QuickTime Player from the Applications folder. Select File > New Screen Recording from the menu bar (or press Control + Command + N). The Screenshot Toolbar works exactly as described above. Record the entire screen or record a selected portion. Use the Options dropdown to change any setting before recording the screen. Select the Stop button on the menu bar. QuickTime Player automatically opens the recording in the QuickTime Player and saves it as a MOV file in the default location (which you can change from Options). Select Edit from the menu to perform simple edits. For example, select Trim to trim your screen recording. FAQ How do I screen record on an iPhone?
